Dreams for our children: How the world could be

The Ocean Room

*For my son Andrew I would like the world to be still full of mother nature, instead of man-made objects. It would be nice to still be able to drive for an hour or so and be in the middle of a forest, on a mountain, or at the beach. I would like for drugs to be so unlimited that he won't have to worry about pressure from them. And last to realize everybody is the same color in God's eyes, to accept people for who they are.

*When my children are adults I hope the world is a more peaceful place. I hope that the family is an important aspect of our society again.

*In 25 - 75 years I would like: world peace, the teaching of love (not hate), global acceptance, healthy environment. Randal Tugwell

*The world for Matthew: I would like the world to be united and working together to have clean air and environment. Everyone would be equal with no racism or discrimination. I hope that God will be more important than MTV or Madonna and that we will have respect for one another. I hope I am around to see Matthew's children but more importantly, hope Matthew has a chance to experience children.

*A world where individuals have more control over their choices and lives and futures; insurance companies, lawyers, bureaucrats, and other paper pushers have less power. A world where there is acceptance and delight in each individual as s/he is, and an environment that supports each person's right to grow and change. A peaceful world--not only the absence of war, but a world where cooperation is more important than competition. Liz Pearce-Smith

*I hope in 25 years my child will see a world full of peace loving, caring people who work together for the common well-being of each other. A place where there is no sickness or death. The world being a true paradise. Nick Bartlett

*I would like the world to be a paradise where there is no sickness, no poverty, no prejudice. Just full of love and goodness and caring with lots of food and housing for everyone.

*I would like the world to be a safe place where man is able to love in the complete sense his fellow inhabitants of planet earth. Where people respect the Mother Earth and allow her to nurture their life streams.

*I would like the world to be free of want. Where everyone's material and health needs can be met. I would like it to be a safe place for children, where they can be free from hate and have an abundance of nurturing and love.

*When my son John grows up, I would like for the world to be somewhat similiar to what it is now, excluding discrimination and pollution. Those are the two major things I would like to see gone in the next 25-75 years. Tammy Thuemler

*My dream for what the world would be like in seventy five years. I hope we still have vegetation, fresh air, clean rivers, and wildlife for our children's children.

*I would like the earth to be as beautiful as it is now. The only difference I would like to see is there would be no abuse in families, that all families could Love and care for each other. If there was Love in families there would be no crime or hate in the world. Love starts at home.

*When my daughter is an adult, I would like the world to be pollution free, peaceful, and I would like for all people no matter what sex or color to be treated equally. I would like for family values to be more important to employers (parental leave, sick-baby days, ect.)

*A world where more emphasis is placed on helping one another. A balanced buget. An increase in topical rain forests. A woman president. To be able to see my great, great great grand children.
